A sexy fast-paced novel, FOURPLAY (Pocket Books; April 2004; $12.00) follows the behind-the-door escapades of marketing exec, Sasha Borianni, who knows what she wants and how to get it. Two years after her tumultuous affair with three men, Sasha begins a new life and establishes Platinum Images, a public relations firm. As her client list grows, Sasha once again finds herself mixing business with pleasure.

But this time balancing her affairs is not so easy. Her newest client and lover, banking executive Jordan Ashe, turns out to be more kinky than she could ever imagine; her old flame, NBA player Phoenix Carter, tries to seduce her while she works to clean up his image after the media portrays him as a reckless gambler; her old love Trent, who ended their relationship over baby-mama drama, wants her back in his life; and financier Lyor Turrell seduces her in order to learn more about Phoenix, whom he believes is involved in his brother's murder and the theft of his family's heirloom jewels.

As FOURPLAY cruises through Sasha's lively trysting, author Brenda L. Thomas treats readers to a slam-dunk of fast-paced entertainment.
